SUMMARY:

Pensacola continues to grow and be a vibrant community. Current housing trends focus on rental opportunities. Residents currently complain of landlords not maintaining properties therefore with a growing market this could be an opportunity to look at the following: Creating a permitting process for all or some rental properties within the city limits. An opportunity to review what already exists on the topic as well as review any concerns citizens may have in their neighborhoods in reference to rental properties and renters who are having problems with their landlords. A permitting process would provide documentation of resident’s rights regarding safety and health standards of a dwelling as well as document the number of rental units for the purpose of neighborhood management. Many cities have adopted permitting standards such as Philadelphia, Tacoma and

Lancaster to name a few.
